DEATH AFTER DEMOBILISATION. — After serving his country in the thick of the fighting right through the war, Mr. Percy Luck died a few months after demobilisation. He was the second son of Mr. and Mrs. Luck, of Oak-road, Leagrave, and formerly of Luton, and he left his father's business as a confectioner in August, 1914, to enlist in the Irish Guards. At the time he was local secretary of the National Service League, and also had many friends at Bury Park Church where he had been brought up. He fought in France until Christmas, 1917, when he came home to train for a well-earned commission. He was not gazetted however, before the armistice was signed. All the time he enjoyed the best of health, but he must have contracted the germs of disease during his trying experiences in France, and he was very ill for some months before his death. The funeral at the General Cemetery was of a civilian nature, and was attended by relatives and old friends. Mr. Harold Luck, his brother, formerly in the Congregational ministry, was in Germany when the war began, and was interned until after the armistice.
